

Annemarie Durbin

1976-1980

After starting in law, Annemarie Durbin moved into banking in 1987. From there she moved to the UK and went on to join the Standard Chartered Bank in 1995. She spent 20 years with them, including being a member of the Executive Committee. Gaining this position at the top of the bank was through understanding her strengths and being relentlessly focused, through hard work, through caring about the people around her and through careful time management including her ability to distinguish between the “urgent and important”.

She considers her greatest success, “To have managed to balance a successful career with family life. There are people in many countries around the world who say that I made a difference to their careers because I listened, cared and coached them.”

“Feel the fear and do it anyway!”
